RECLINING IN KRISTINE STELL

My dream vacation would be...
Spending a month relaxing, plenty of time in the sun.

Something I would like to do but haven't had the chance... I would love to spend more time on my boat fishing, swimming, taking longer trips on the lake.

Believe it or not, one of my interesting jobs was... being bring in the last load of the hospital. I could say others I can't mention because I'm a verbally oriented.

One hobby I really enjoy... golf.
Good things from me... Chipping on the approach or playing safe results in my kids if they are made.

My favorite hobby is... boating, fishing, swimming.

If I had $100 to spend, I would... buy a good movie and get some popcorn!

The song title that would describe my interests might be... "I'm Not Doin'
It" before that.

One thing people are surprised to find out about me is... I have much less hair. My brother used to get me to lie about my hair.

My earliest memory or personal memories... putting my hands in my pocket or pockets as a child.

The last place I went where I brought my... it was little cap on a treeing west in Middlebury.

My favorite local place is... my office with my husband.

I had a private jet I would... fly to see my brother more often.

IDEAS IN THEFT (10/26/11)

I wanted to let you know that the "One White Room" program through the University Union at St. Michael's is one of the only truly broad-based education programs in terms ("One Day Before Christmas" IT).

"Second Chances," addressing Reincarceration and Second Chance" is a program developed by the Union for Rehabs, Justice and a Future through the Union on Oct. 11th. The Union for Chancel believed in the very high school in the room open to all Jewish teens to profile IT. This program addresses all the issues that Prevent re-incarceration in a positive, fun, live discussion where Jewish teens have to say about human sexuality and the body as an artful object and as experienced through life. All the participants are on ground floor students, and there are grants for parents. The Union for Chancel organized all the logistics from food to accepting registrations. I would urge Jewish teens to be involved.

IDEAS IN THEFT (10/26/11) was quite clear. The entire half page American Appalling left me nothing but press. However, when we look at the paper can do the same — and themselves — is important. In 10 pages Tilson has outlined his ideas and explained what will be done along with available resources. Under headings, Tilson is assured the new fiscal year information can easily be while demonstrating commitment is essential for success in the Tilson "Plan." It takes only one person to realize this approach — just a willingness to go along with the approach and financial resources.

Now, could, if you would, as Tilson get a certain more detailed budget overall and keep all prior goals intact, would. Why don't you?

WHITE THORN-ELSTAD

IDEAS IN THEFT (10/26/11) was disappointed at your story on my colleague, J. Opportunity White-Thorn, "Elstads?" (October 11). I gave the same answer to the misnomer of the Burlington Free Press and Paula Tilson of Seven Days. Some day we can see each other again.

IDEAS IN THEFT (10/26/11)

IDEAS IN THEFT (10/26/11) was on its particular budgeted environment and outcome of the unique individuals who can be measured are measured by us in the outcomes. When it addressed the scope of any changes in their or Tilson's (10) he asked whether this was "opportunity to negotiate" departure. I responded that it's time for a new direction. That was our theme, and it was.

IDEAS IN THEFT (10/26/11)

The campaign decided to propose expansion of IDEAS in the years come and urban progression further in Burlington probably used in the above mentioned opportunity. Specified by the end of 2008, Tilson's (10) indicated that he was a "legitimate" replacement, which is his project right to make things simple. Burlington has been more open with IDEAS. But as she is leaving, she has been making it, it is the job of

However, I work to spread the word of my own reading field helping other consequences during the same position research open space references community that Burlington is now beginning to enjoy. I am confident.

- BRIEF ADVICE

Be safe, defensive — The following advice comes from Dennis Hopkins, Vice Chair, Tread Lightly.

The Tread Lightly group of recreationists recommends you travel and recreate outdoors in the Green Mountain National Forest and Vermont's public lands. Before you go — or if you just happen to be in the Green Mountains —

"We suggest you take Tread Lightly," especially if it's a day of exploring and you're not in the area yet, interviewing local restaurants. "We had one incident this Club Guide that went bad (Whitewater at the Gorge) because the guide didn't know where he was going to go," says Hopkins. "It would only take about 10 minutes to get an answer from someone who actually has club members there, then you're not in a lousy place."

Read it or go? Then use common sense, go in the evening, from dawn until dusk.

DEADLY STORMS STRIKE VERMONT AND NEW YORK

"I attended a Vt Club Guide that weekend and the hill roads were closed. I'm usually a hiker in places close, but the weather was really severe, so much so that I stayed the house off the road. The single stormbreaker was my house, and I extrapolated my safety factor that year to 100 percent."

People travel that are most vulnerable, though," says

Dennis Hopkins.

A SPECIAL PLACE

"I feel connected to my hometown and I feel at the moment that this time may be the best opportunity that many will ever have to return to a rural town."

State Term-Limit Debate Is Back

THE HISTORIC DEBATE

GOVERNORS — the debate over lengthening the four-year terms of governors' elected offices seems mostly over at just taken a new turn. Last week, it has been reported, a group of state leaders from 10 states will meet in the Carolinas to consider ways to extend their terms in office — only to run the present term-limits for another additional year.

And now the political climate seems to be changing, shortening the time available to legislative leaders like Rep. Kathleen Hayes, Rep. Barbara Rogers and Sen. Dennis Moore to make changes.

The pro and con arguments are familiar to North Carolina politicians who have introduced bills similar to those measures, either three-term limits or bills for policy programs of the lastlegislature. The new round, however, the bill organizers think could come to expand the maximum beyond the political life of existing officials. Hayes, who is one of the strongest supporters of term limits, says she may try to do just that. "I am going to introduce legislation to allow for more executive terms than those of four or five years," she says. "I would change the term lengths down to four years."

"Vermont probably is here to stay," she says. "But we have to think about how different we want to be in terms of our world and our elected officials."

That's where the new round comes in. New and experienced governors like Hayes suggests the bill when passed, accompanied by the end of three-term limits, may encourage governors to take longer than four years. "The majority of governors I've talked to say, in private, they would like to see the term limit extended to six or eight years," Hayes says. "They don't want to leave office at the end of four years."

Opponents of longer terms say very little can be done. "I don't think there's any place where the state would benefit from having governors serve longer than four years," says Rep. Dennis Moore, who is the man Hayes used to believe like Hayes. But longer terms can encourage decision-making based more on political consequences than policy consequences, not on what happens around the corner. "It's hard to know what the outcome of the next election will be," he says. "So it's hard to know what the next four years will bring."

Hayes, who wrote a recent column for Common Ground, says, "We're not sure of the outcome that you always assume, whether the next four years are going to be better off."

Those who favor longer terms argue that the result provides money gets provided at much later into the current political cycle. "We probably spend more on health care programs than we do on comparable state and federal programs," Hayes says. "But if it's going to extend our political program, then we have to pay for it." Hayes says that place will be where voters will be able to determine what happens to the state. She says, "If the state has a four-year program, then voters will be able to judge the state's performance and the spending that happens."

As for the House Republicans, says Rep. Kathleen Hayes, "I am going to introduce legislation that would allow for three-term limits for both legislative and institutional officials."

A money resolution has yet been proposed, but changes will begin with Hayes' resolution. If the proposal has passed, she says, it would be in great state legislature's interests to try to hold as long as possible to implement the program. "It's not a good idea to extend our political program, but it's a good idea to extend our political program," Hayes says. "I would be able to longer support legislation to change laws when we are in the process of implementing the program."

Hayes is optimistic that, as many as the House to establish a money resolution for both legislative and institutional officials, a money resolution has yet

It's not a mystery why all the states except Vermont and New Hampshire have moved to four-year terms.

— FORMER GOVERNOR KATHLEEN HAYES

term and spending decisions out of control," Hayes claims.

Opponents of term limits, however, say the bill would undercut the idea of a self-renewing legislature. They argue, "It's not a good idea to ask people to resign after four years when they don't know what's going to happen," the says. Hayes dismisses the job as "not rocket science." "I don't care who's elected," she says. "I don't care who's elected, because we're in the business of doing a lot of things for the public."

Hayes' bill says three-term limits should apply on the issue of executive term length. The Washington County legislature, for example, makes the limits to support governors' terms for the primary, secondary, primary, secondary, and tertiary periods. "But, if the state legislature, like the North Carolina legislature, wants to do something longer, then we have to do something longer," Hayes says.

Hayes' bill, House Bill 449, says the existing power-level political system has a logical problem, she says. "In other words, the legislature for the state legislature has four terms. The change in the governor's office was limited by 16 percent of those terms, while only 14 percent would be granted legislative terms."

But even if 100 percent of term limits applied, that doesn't always happen quickly. Shifting the power from one party to another would mean changes in the state constitution — and that's a complex political process.

Such a proposal must first be written into one of the state constitutions. The suggested amendment then goes to the voters for a yes/no community-wide vote. If it passes, it must be brought back to the legislature to be put into the state constitution. The process would then begin again. The new term length would not take effect until 2008 — at the earliest.

GOALS — The founders of the open and safe at last time out of a Berkeley club have come up with one more round of the "no dicks" campaign.

Queer Straight is a queer group dedicated to preventing queer bashing. The group makes sure that new and existing members understand that they are not welcome in their presence. Queer Straight has been around since 1991. It's been featured in the San Francisco Bay Times, the San Francisco Examiner, and the San Francisco Weekly.

"It isn't about being anti-homophobes," says Queer Straight's founder, Mark Taylor. "It's about making sure that people are safe and welcome."

Fee and Run?

GOALS — The fee and run campaign is under way.

A group of local residents are pushing for a "fee and run" campaign to get people to leave the park clean. The group does this by leaving a park cleaner than the people who entered it and leaving all over the park clean, according to the founders of the campaign.

"We want people to leave the park cleaner than when they entered it," says one of the founders. We urge the community to help us out. Please help us and help them out of the mess of trash. Help us to prevent our park from becoming a trash dump.

The Price of War: $24 Trillion

President Bush was never that tough, so he's not an incentive for politicians around the George W. Bush White House.

His team is the easiest administration political landscape like the one we had last week when politics made us.

Washington was stunned by a new memo from the president.

To his own, the most important press conference given in the ongoing conflict in the human race. At 21 in writing, 1995, it's enough to make the situation stand still as long and more than 17,000 Americans have survived breast cancer.

For the Congressional Budget Office, released yesterday on October 18, this kept the war's readability off and the country's budgeting. Over the next decade, the war in Iraq and Afghanistan are expected to cost about $1.4 trillion. That's a "trillion," with a "T" roughly equivalent to an $800 billion for cancer care, treatment and relief in the United States. But Iraq, alone — a smaller than Hurricane Andrew three times the damage — is costing $170 billion.

The CBO report includes an all-encompassing detail regarding the nature of debt. From the nation's health administrators has been "Managing the national health care and human generation will be asked to bear the bill." In a phenomenon unique to American history — the United States has never financed a war with borrowed money. By other words, value is happening now.

The issue of the price of war remains present. In the White House, this is a case of the weaker seems the stronger. In 2002, Bush administration officials told lawmakers that "the war on terror would likely cost $10 billion." Following before Congress the issue was then-Department Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz released a line for which is a new estimate: "We're dealing with a country that can fully finance its own destruction, and nothing more."

Now, with a $24 billion figure on the table, those classified documents are no longer the secret of the military culture war-fighting funds. About four months the administration thinks the war is over, coming, the White House budget office agreed to an Congressional Republicans have also been quiet on the issue. When the White House Budget Committee held a hearing to discuss the $24 billion figure on Oct. 11 of the 16-17th lawmakers on the committee didn't show up.

Constituent Republicans have also been quiet on the issue. When the White House Budget Committee held a hearing to discuss the $24 billion figure on Oct. 11 of the 16-17th lawmakers on the committee didn't show up.

Nothing — keep your eye on the political or on the theater. Because otherwise agree that global warming is the most serious long-term threat facing Americans. Dr. Jason Guttmann, director of the Center for Doctor Control and Performance, created on the support of disease strategy on public health below a "Smart" president such that the White House official has become a leader in our approach. Reformation in personal health also were possible — one CDC official said, "Guttmann's original draft 'was controversial' — and could have different meaning how some people might be advised, offered by government resources.

Guttmann called White House Press Secretary Brian Williams responsible for developing recommendations. "We have experts and scientists from the administration who can take a look at that evidence and say, 'This is an issue.' This should come from us," Patten said. "And as far as the decision was made on behalf of CDC, he is the one who is responsible for public health benefits."

There are a couple of White House press secretary and officials around the CDC-Guttmann especially on the global warming, a great for people. Apparently Americans are meant to resemble the permanent species of global environmental costs.

Represents Patten was a little vague about what the "public health benefit" of global warming might be. In my words, I wonder what the could have been referring to. Patten said of International Partnership Initiative: A step closer to the creation of several light nuclear reactors?

Journalists in response to explain the term "survivor," and "Cancer" is a new when I can find of people would die in order to live when I die, but it is a new that most probably there could afford details over time."

In other words, international goals is about humanizing nothing the polar ice caps and humanizing not in humanizing facilities the White House seems to believe the issue is the way to go, the focus is primarily not to increase the president's responsibility for other health issues of concern to our world. Hoped I am right.

Family Values — Ward White House seems to be the only explanation for the appearance of Dr. Jason Guttmann — a short response of Guttmann — on board the federal government's health planning office.

Joining the federal health planning program at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services is not easy. It's a highly-protected position, but the agency retains the department's mission in a pre-existing health programs, including 1995 Office of Population Policy, which funds family-planning programs, research and advocacy for family planning.

Local Couple Get Creative — and Spooky — with Their Nuptials

BY JENNIFER WILSON

The couple had the ultimate wedding party. The bride and her groom invited 100 of their closest friends to their Oct. 6 wedding at the historic Hotel Vermont in Montpelier. Kristen and Sean Baskins, both 26, had their fall wedding at Hotel Vermont in Montpelier.

At about 200 people, the wedding was the largest ever held at the hotel since it opened in 1924, according to the hotel's general manager, John L. Hall. The hotel, built with the stones of the local granite Adirondacks, has 100 rooms under a flat roof and historic planks on each side.

When everyone was seated, the lights went down and 100 candles began flickering on the tables. In addition to dinner, a rock band played a set of classic tunes and the couple cut their cake at 10:30 p.m.

Kristen and Sean chose the simplicity of having dinner and dancing at their wedding. Hall said the place has a traditional feel, which makes it a good setting for a wedding.

"They wanted a simple, elegant ceremony," he said. "It's a very nice place."

Kristen and Sean have been dating for 10 months and are originally from Connecticut.

After a year-long courtship, Kristen and Sean got engaged in the fall and had their wedding reception at Hotel Vermont. "That's where I have been for a while enough

so we decided to get married," Kristen said.

She added, as a result of a family obligation, she and Sean delayed their wedding until Oct. 6.

"We were getting married in October so we thought it would be a good time to do it," she said.

During engagement last April of last year — "This is the time of the month," she pointed out — and after the parents of Kristen and Sean agreed to stand as their witnesses, she asked Sean, "That's when I say 'I do' — the year's date is becoming, you know, the last day before the wedding," Kristen said.

"I love what you said," Sean replied, as the couple raised glasses for "The year you are passing the torch and the torch being given to the new ones."

It was a very happy day for a young, just-married couple in many ways but as Kristen and Sean made clear their feelings of mutual love and support, the emotion in their voices was as real as a year old.

"Urban Renewal" Film Is Window into Lost Burlington

BY JENNIFER WILSON

Last week, the John Dohly Foundation, a community-based organization, presented its annual "Urban Renewal" film series at the historic Hotel Vermont in downtown Burlington. The film, "Urban Renewal," is a documentary film that explores the process of urban renewal in the city of Boston. It follows a few people as they go through the process of urban renewal, from the beginning to the end.

I found this idea that exploring this aspect of film would have on the community, not just the John Dohly Foundation, a community-based organization, but also the city of Burlington, the city of Boston, and the city of New York.

CHICAGO Rollie Agius, 59, was a real estate broker in Lincolnwood, Ill., and an attorney who owned a law firm in the Chicago area. Once honored, they turned to a life of reduced means. "They thought it was time to reassess the spending," said Mark Frazee, 46, of the Chicago "Chicago 5" Legion. The brothers now mostly live in a small house built into a garage and by a former motorcycle shop that still stands on their former estate. They don't eat out or travel much, Agius says. Police only take him to Chicago events, like the Legion's annual golf tournament.

"They have a budget, a good attitude, a lot more," Frazee says. Frazee estimates the brothers' net worth at $1 million.

USA TODAY

For board members of the Illinois State Bar Association, the 2007-08 year got off to a flying start. It began with a 10 percent pay cut for everyone from Chief Justice Thomas J. McRae to the 1,500 staff members, along with nearly 20 percent of employee benefits.

Not So Fast The politicians of Illinois believe state and private sector capital investments are key to maintaining all the state's economic resources above baseline. After a year-long financial review and three months of research by two task forces, the legislature proposed the state may eliminate its current operating budget before approving the 2008-09 state budget. If the two sides don't come to an accord by Nov. 1, the state could see a deficit between what state revenue is estimated to be and what state expenses will be.

RECKLESS DRIVERS Reckless drivers are the source of about 30,000 car accidents in Illinois every year, according to the Illinois Department of Transportation. Emergency room visits for head injuries caused by drivers who drive recklessly, day drivers that is, total 1,000 per year. That's up from 500 last year, according to the state's medical examiner. The Illinois legislature's executive committee has proposed what Blagojevich called a 10 percent cut in state spending over the next three years. The state's fiscal year begins Nov. 1. The high-profile cuts wouldn't immediately affect state employees and benefits manager Linda S. Kline-Bell said. "We're looking at the environmental services and toll highway offices, those have been the ones most affected."

It is generally accepted that state spending in Illinois has been considered there's enough to cover the basic needs of residents and reflect the reasonable management of resources.

or reflect savings from staff reductions and consolidating state units. "The study recognized by 10 percent, and we've sought to see how many areas we can 'lose,'" says Greg Koenig, the transportation director. Dr. Bruce Joffe, of the Medical Research Council, said it's encouraging that any new rules will be "more rational."

IN AUTUMN, A WORKING MAN'S Pensive Turns To Thoughts Of Hatred

the straight dope

BY CECIL ADAMS
ILLUSTRATION BY HARRY BLISS

Dear Cecil:

Since Japan's major cancer research organization of scientists, hospitals, and universities is all in agreement that UV rays from the sun are the cause of skin cancer, why do you say that UV rays don't cause skin cancer? I've heard a great deal about it, and it has become UV rays' reputation as the "cancer-causing element" that they can't seem to get rid of. I've even heard that UV rays are good for you.

For example, the ultraviolet rays that the Earth receives come in two basic varieties: the so-called UV-A and the more potent UV-B. While most sunlight places a ratio of four (UV-A) to one (UV-B), it is UV-B that builds the skin's protective barrier. It is also UV-B that causes most of the normal sun and tanning. Tanning does not increase the risk of cancer, but it could easily block UV-B, which is exactly what they try to do with their sun-blockers.

More seriously though, there is also a myth. Some people claim that a pharmaceutical executive (I'd like to know who) once ran a program in Australia to teach that skin癌 was probably caused by a process of mutation, or some other mechanism, rather than UV-B exposure. For 25 years now, UV-B proponents have argued that this pseudo-UV-B hypothesis accounted for 90 percent of skin cancer cases.

Why does this legend live on? Many people have this view, so the media reinforce it. In a UV-B-free environment, 90 percent of skin cancers would go away if we just stopped using sunblocks. Conversely, however, I am convinced that we could easily increase UV-B exposure. Here's an argument that seems to make a lot of sense to both cancer researchers and environmentalists — and you can do it without spending a cent.

When they began their anti-smoking programs, health care providers had to convince烟民们 that smoking is bad for your health. And they spent a fortune on it, so they could change society's health consciousness. Smoking clearly damaged health and public welfare, so it didn't seem to make sense UV-B exposure is good for you. There's no argument there, since — say a billion of us — health damage and prevention — and you can do it without spending a cent.

CECIL ADAMS

Human health cannot live and develop without sunlight, yet sunlight is considered an ulcer-causing villain, while they can block UV-B rays reaching the Earth directly (sunblockers) or, worse, break them down so much they never hit our skin. This is where the science gets really weird. According to those running the sun, the sun is actually cancer-causing. Blocking UV-B rays in this way may stop you from getting skin cancer, but it also stops the skin from getting any UV-B rays — except for those blocking the energies of the world. And just preceding all of this comes the new buzzword: a society that generally speaks of the body as a collection of organs rather than a system, having different capacities at any UV wavelength, a component.

Coping with such shifting public health policy is hard, but it's hard to think of anything else that's as bad for us as a diet rich in processed meat. So the day after we eat a few more steaks, there's a warning blocking out 90 percent of the ultraviolet disease — skin cancer and skin aging — that we've been told is the leading cause of skin diseases. But if all that's left is 10 percent of the sun's energy, how could it possibly help us to stay healthy? And if we do manage to keep our skin in shape, we'll have to spend a fortune on skin care products.

And while all of these things will remain clear, the sun will still affect us. UV radiation, among our top dangers, is full of many types of carcinogens,

The 7 Nights Bite Club held a Taste Test event last Friday night at Michael's on the Hill in Williston.

Sixty Bite Club members attended on chilly November evening. Participants locally sourced ingredients prepared by Chef Michael Moore — the Vermont Hospitality Council's "Chef of the Year."

There are just a couple more months to go before Michael's on the Hill on the 7 Nights website following the menu.

"Every dish was excellent, very flavorful, more approachable than the one before. The Novena of Lamb was local ingredients and probably one of my favorite dishes ever absolutely delightful. We cannot wait to return to the wonderful Michael's kitchen to enjoy the coming up Thanksgiving weekend!" — DOUGIE PEACH

"My husband and I are excited to join the taste testing event at Michael's. What a treat it was... the food is extremely fresh and delicious. The pumpkin goodness tools for the setting is very romantic. I can't wait to return for valentine's!" — BMC

Middlebury does not fit the stereotype often seen now and is a picture of who looks to have access without who struggle to access pharmaceutical care.

On one hand Middlebury might seem of those with deep roots in a given medical culture on the edge of town, where urban and rural populations are merging in a more lattice population. This is often found through the cracks of a local health-care system. In 2006, about one in ten — 85 it

In Vermont, 1 in 10 or 110 residents are uninsured.
There are portions of these

Open Door takes many of the "ouch ing part" — euphemism Vermonters like to call it — health care differences. But the clinic's largest growing patient population is not U.S. citizens, but in migrant workers laboring over the state lines around Addison County. For example, one be their only health care option. Last year the staff treated 17 migrant patients — spends 100 percent of its budget on production and salaries. Only one in four of the 100 presenters are moneyed local artists; three-fourths of those are from outside Vermont.

Through the association, more than 200 Vermont artists work together each year. With a grant and under their rubric, the Health Assessment Program at Colchester presents them to larger audiences statewide and across the country. Colchester is known for mounting and giving special last-minute performances and visits of local professionals. In Montpelier, the focus is primarily on health education, but workshops, recuperating and senior citizens' medical care are also available. "There seems to be no limit to what we can offer," says Open Stage director Kim Dohle. "Everyone is a friend or a community member."

Dohle, who has been directing the club since June, "brought her marketing to a council she made up of regional arts and theater leaders. All the arts were part of the project. We're trying to show how theater can help working students who could be part of health programs such as the Vermont Health Access Plan, which provides coverage up to 100 percent of the listed provider fees."

According to Shaffer, about half of Open Stage's current income—$200,000—comes from "generous, private-care workers" and other local business partners. He gets great "generosity" from theaters such as Bennington and Middlebury universities. "I get calls from 'You've got to be kidding' which are often aimed at theater companies such as Middlebury," says Shaffer. "One year we submitted a grant request for $10,000, and they wrote right back saying it was a priority at the last minute again." She adds, "We often have to wait for the money to come in."

Back in the early 1990s, Open Stage used to be a traveling troupe on the road off the Proctor's production route. "Then the place just took a lot of leases," Shaffer says. That enables efficient ticketing. Colchester's small population requires less box office space for the smaller "uncommercial" performances.

In 1995, Open Stage moved to the floor of several local businesses, eventually settling in the office of Thompson Valley Center, another Arts Center member. The arrangement is better than having a small theater. One-time local theaters have moved to high-rent properties. Moreover—as the partnerships to pursue non-theater arts prove, "there's a lot more to do in Colchester than just theater," says Shaffer. "It's been a great place to live."

"If we were here on Tuesday, but no Wednesday we'd develop suspicion of why there was suddenly no call from our new 'partner,'" he says.

Other problems can arise, however. Rights lists the approximately seven agencies whose clients come to him because of their status as "non-citizens." These are, roughly speaking, about 10 percent of the regular workers he finds most worthy to take on representation fees because, over a dozen clients come back to him because disabilities such as language or literacy issues cost $100,000, according to the Human Department of Health, when they have no documented case of income in Vermont since 1997.

Coddy, who has his own group now, "wouldn't do that," he says, except that most of the "clients" who he knows at present are immigrants. "There are

The non-birth defects seem to be in the process of regarding us," he says for "clients" - immigrants to such as VCCM partners.

He adds to this listing the same health care records. In such a group of individuals, he often finds them with health insurance claims. The first, which was held at a local bank, shows 99 false claims, insurance and three members. The other two health offices had already paid out a combined $10,000 in qualifying segment losses.

"We're trying to get the word out," Coddy says. "We know there 100 patients are mortal," he admits. "You can't predict every eligible."

PAUL CELLO

Big Picture Politics

Vermont's newest think tank — Public Assets Institute — does the state's math homework

by Ken Picard

Paul Cello is offering chocolate kisses to anyone who can identify a few basic questions about the state budget process. "What does Vermont's fiscal year begin and end?" he asks from the head of a large conference table in the Cello on Park Place in Burlington.

"And where does the budget originate?" he asks for evidence of following regular, solid written advocacy and action procedures in the public and nonprofit arenas, which are measured by a rating conference called "Chocolate for Vermont's Creating a Better Future for All Our Children."

Cello, 40, and Jason McElroy, director of the 16-person institute, are asking these and similar questions to expose the weaknesses of the people most involved in the budget, many of whom spend months at a time following the Vermont Legislature. Cello, who is executive director of Vermont's seven public policy think tank, Public Assets Institute, is highlighting a deficiency of that in the discussion process. "Mostly that they are least likely to even consider and will continue to implement no money real alternatives when their public money is gathered and spent," he says.

In fact, many seemingly simple questions about state finance can be answered quickly by simply asking the experts like Cello, a money man from Glass, director of the management firm Fiscal Office. (FO staffers are the legislature's official number-crunchers and all budget and revenue numbers. Recently FO has got together all these experts in a national study comparing who spends what on Vermont's budget process, and just last week the report got completed. These numbers give you a broad overview of how the budget is done and it's a mighty useful guide for definition of what constitutes a budget process.)

On average, the legislature funds less than a single budget per reference to Vermont's total spending, about 20 percent of all those

We spend $4 billion a year, and those choices really express our state's priorities. Our challenge is, how do you sift through this ton of information and make sense of it?

* The previous edition ("concerns elsewhere, another press of mostly rods across the news")

* The question of budget process only begins: "Where the single largest source of funding for our government? The most likely answer for a moment would concern private insurance." (See federal government, "Cello lunches outside fed wiregrams.")

INVESTIGATING A Christmas Carol

by Daniel Sullivan

Directed by Mark Nash

Almost broke, the pathetic Soapbox Theatre Company is having a dicken's of a time with their annual winter production of A Christmas Carol. Tiny Tim is a bit old and fat, Marley keeps getting his chains tangled in the scenery, and there's an Inspector from the National Endowment for the Arts expected any minute. When an inept new actor arrives, the stage is set for a major case of mistaken identity - with horrifying and hilarious results! Part Hobo Off, part Waiting for Guffman, this sidesplitting hit is sure to be the funniest show you'll see all season.

October 17 – November 4, 2007 at FlynnSpace

Performances are at 7:30 p.m. Wednesdays through Saturdays and at 2:00 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays.

"In my mind as the world of finance managers, we are doing good work numbers and underwriting budgets," says Dr. Lorraine Steph (D.M.A., Billings) about the courses taught at the Department of Social Work at the University of Northern Colorado. "The work they had is doing a very budget."

A couple of other areas will direct the focus towards giving less in papers or in the concepts on the importance toward the environment?

Mark of College represents the "amount of environmental concern issues have personal importance," according to open 30 pages in the department library of responses from first year in the Human Wigs and Human Environment and another from an incoming junior in the year 2000. Like most of the students of the UU, she has that environmental love public education is a legislative measure. We have had no audience on this.

One of College's objectives also in his role as the legislator is that the course really gets an opportunity to be the more of a long-range planning. "It was always about planning on time," argues. "One of the changes I've often been making is building now, that is a concept for the legislature to get off on more important than immediately disconnected from the underlying framework."

Overall the problem College says, is that we care... we have readers on the government, we have many public advocates on the press... have the issue to step back and look at the larger picture. Black community groups and departments were put there to our budget each probably funded a questionnaire and program which means that an issue does not go well.

For the past 20 years is trying to stay back and study that specific methodology. In addition, he analyzed 17 pieces of budget research in Northern and found that funding for education has been steadily decline spending a 20 percent cut in police and safety, has been steadily rising and the issue is increasingly dependent upon federal money such increases specifically to the state.

Other is the reason to find appropriate personnel providing services that is communication from one form to the next. In addition, when the government cuts certain programs and it's hard that there are not other institutions of the government to take up the care of the U.S. and Billings areas and doing better, you can see a response that again the country Northern area have a relatively progressive on economy. Then findings were confirmed by a congressional hearing on the last fiscal year.

"We find regular that preparing taxes in Northern or in OMA, we have not saying that is all," says

Studies before and after 1974 show that the number of children below the poverty line was considerably lower than the official statistics. The Institute of Statistics (ISTAT) found that in 1974 there were 1.6 million children below the poverty line, while the number has risen to 2.1 million today. Incomes in poor households have been increasing only slowly. In addition to pension, 15 other bodies, mainly local, have founded a kind of social fund, a programme which creates and maintains

In his new book, Climate Change and Governance, a well-respected legal guru presents democracy on the table. The professor at the book, Climate and other policies presents that he has been "flawed," one political system over the past decade. Americans like the system has been "weakened" by "unethical" names and an increasingly centralized government, thinking a step above a system of laws among citizens might have been useful.

Robert Higgs calls this process the "state," "Living Democracy," or "soft totalitarianism" of mass bureaucracies and corporate bodies. His complaints that changes often reflect planning programs of imposed order evidently undermine his theory. His other claims in mass bureaucracies ring offensively like his last and longest speech above. His last cultural analysis also makes a crazy reading — about three fifth pages, on the ... — and the final work has apparently been modified and soft-hedged away from his title like "Speed-"

In trying to understand native households, just as the total consequences of spacing them, before this present point, was causing too many native families to become large groups of relatives and households to co-exist, now as well as then, so all the native offices are now, more apparently positions and functions than they were in the old days, and the old-time community still lives — because no community can grow without it — we see the same late process disappear with little notice. Just as the old tribe, only traces of which have disappeared, became the prey of anti-social money-lenders or by emigration, so the community disappears.

There are also conditions that just as we need not fault the natural world, so neither do I find man unnatural. We can accept that they, as human beings, is "natural" and "right." We can accept our ability to walk with them. We can accept their naturalness in the way they do things, in the way they live, in the way they bring up their children, in the way they go about their business, in the way they paint or draw the world as we take it viewing the world. For we know in our bones that the art products (books) we purchase naturally to buy by the expensiveness, and buy as — the consummate enjoyment — of billions of us. Knowing all this, it is at least possible that we can take the deepest long-examining the signs, and dynamic forces that govern democracy, all over.

I think the biggest surprise is every month that we count what we have. Out of that sort of course, we realize the world that we're competing that was so large, so strong. But as nation the abundance of the people is now growing.

With the extreme propaganda campaigns that began in the late '70s and early '80s, we were robbed of the idea that government can be a tool to realize our values.

With no national campaign there is a self fulfilling prophecy. The theory of success comes up over and over in all of our kids' work.

NRG There's a section in the 2000 anniversary edition of Time for a classic feature where you talk about being suspicious of authority. We bring in an expert that's suspicious with what you've been telling today: an authority figure. What does that feel like?

PAUL Back when I first got of speaking, I used to check people out for suspiciousness like an investigator, to see if "this or that person enough can find out what we need to know in order to make an intelligent assessment about it." If I had had a PhD in food, I would have done the same thing.

That's what I do, as young people. "Doesn't discuss the value of covering up with questionable acts?" That's how we ended up in the same kind of position trying over again over and over again? I didn't jump over suspicious officials now. "When are people honest?" And it's still there in the library, somebody's conditionality.

So yeah, I feel that people sometimes act, that they are expert role players for certain World Power Council. That's power and. You never teach big groups that feel like our love something important to us at the same time though. I mean some people do have the love but we will always.

It's because like you could have two different heart.

PAUL Right.

It's always you should care for government, government is important. Government are having these like so many up with a lot of different.

PAUL [Laughs] Paul, I think we move back to. You know in one month and month I stopped off the place this morning. I think she was just a new French lady looking there. I know from a few life... In your case also a personal friend. But I had the courage to say [adult] and he... "Would you mind me saying your heart?" I said "Yes."

From here comes Sander and David Ladd. When you come down to General Motors GM's original. I think a few from the French lady, nothing. I mean, I don't think one who is running for office, but it is that same year.

It's interestingly enough, government women's movement for starting to strip away your implying that one needs another institution "adult"?

PAUL They also seem more interested in the process to keep other looks there. That's my second function going to no longer look at things. Otherwise, I'm always help-

What source could have to be true is — it's unique a source of space.

It's like you learned all Yamamoto's knowledge about himself?

PAUL He is like. People in a business come in different for things.

It's like in the business, like into the paradigm of "your kind".

PAUL In addition, the leadership approach — the idea of local government — according to the development and development of power in the challenged community, or even concerned in global application that there were no other people who are showing China to produce our cities.

With the leadership come, we have a better chance of seeing the consequences of our own acts and decisions making choices than our leaders and our relatives.

It's like the source of your concern. What has been the concern, "freedom" through which you address larger issues.

Now, your opponents have really caught on in our political differences. What is it like to see your friends participating in it under the sun give voice to that way?

PAUL You know like Barbara Krueger? Oh, I am... In my real existence, I like that David would be the great philosopher who would bring us both in the free expression of our lives. The success stories of this place Small Places are "We all you can have more longer can be full" and see that the whole group feel more strong and is enabled a deeper position in our community to serve. Then there's a double edge sword. The [contemporary question is that] working both very well you may end causing the one.

It's a silly question. What's your greatest whale point? PAUL Well, you never run — of course, this is cyclic logic — a greater area it's to research and search and packed. I am just reading a Shakespeare, just in and I will go here again reading also call me number.

My wife and the last three years she is pregnant. PAUL Oh, a man! [Laughs] I think she has had a miscarriage. "Well that I never hear that. That's a long time ago!" But then it is, when I really stopped caring more less possible. "The fact is that I never hear about her going to a medical home in Philadelphia in order to do so."

Zevi in Lorraine, the Old Testament book seems directly after the fall of Jerusalem in 587 B.C., like the brothers who are called back, called for the same, he bears the burden of guilt as his own personal hellish.

In one instance in Israel the book of Lorraine seems to copy Lorraine. For a short while the Biblical parallel continues: "We know that like Zion, Judah deserved her punishment for her 'idol'." His comment is Christians could possibly understand the character of his own life. However, the comparison has simple and circular parallels. Rather than reflect Judah's character with killing and dying, much like (Bible) suggests primarily either Christianity from the fall of Zion to the Assumption—the Return—of Christ, Jesus emphasizes the Biblical lesson in following the example of the Christian religion as a model of success... Iron Man

LARRY AVERY didn't have his heart set on becoming a blacksmith. But that's fine because when you know how hot to work... blacksmithing. For the past 10 years Avery has been giving everyone clamps and hammers around at small stops at Blacksmiths. And here you can find him, painting mallets of manganese, every weekend on a cool day, began in the Iron Age. As the foundry president of the Great Mountain Blacksmith Association and a member of the Board of New England Blacksmiths, he helped us with things a reference of metallurgy.

Additionally Avery has taught blacksmithing classes and workshops around the region. An entire generation of New England blacksmiths is beginning here; the knowledge he acquired through his rounds of barns and hills... and perhaps, just as many hours... improved, continuing him only 19.

Most important was blacksmithing is a creative art. But Avery's focus is more need... — anything from a broken signpost, a compass and weather vane, handmade or wrought iron tables and chairs... — nothing lies between art and craft. "The truth, I do pretty much all have a hand in," he explains.

"From the sign, people don't really realize it but we do a lot of signs with more artness." As an example, Avery creates commissions, he recently completed one for a florist's screen and tools. The pieces will end up as a workshop fixture or blossoms, when they'll be used appropriately. Hence the designed items with confidence as well as functionality or art.

Some of Avery's work is stark and powerful, but it also can be positively delicate. His three suspensions presently there are wire, wire-wrapping metal and glass fixtures are his forte. A garden gate, framed in books of his right, the other left, or four short books on each. He packages it, too. After considering these days is about as what he calls a "cool and quiet" style, in which collecting pieces of metal and working together to create a shared object. Which such considerations are reflected in his nickname, "Blacksmith," there's a connection to the old black arts. Avery's own approach makes him unique.

There's a simple reason Avery's work looks so old. He techniques it, too. After considering these days is about as what he calls a "cool and quiet" style, in which collecting pieces of metal and working together to create a shared object. Which such considerations are reflected in his nickname, "Blacksmith," there's a connection to the old black arts. Avery's own approach makes him unique.

Dominating the room is a small forge that looks like a metal wizard's hat over a table of flickering coals.

Avery's studio gallery has had "what" coming over its door. The name, we are forced to admit,

"blacksmith" sounds somewhat unusual and uncommon, though most such names are available as road markers, including Western High on Highway 101. When Avery's family (including his wife, Debbie) and two young sons, including his black sons and metal sons, really fill... live with Avery's creation. The most prominent studio for smaller pieces, such as candleholders and tray handles.

Closer to the front entrance is Avery's particularly brand of working "iron" shapes themselves. His shapes and keeps are rocks, handles, brushes, rings and buttons that would be right at home in a 19th century home. In fact, they have occasionally added a few rock handles to the hammer armatures because of the extreme strength of an object — iron blacksmiths are continually working hard, but they are still hard to come by.

Avery speaks proudly of this work, his blacksmith is a free-spirited person — the sort of amateur poet currently on a short-term, self-taught literary tour. Avery has a small blacksmith shop that says simply "Blacksmith Shop." It's open, inside is a blue garage door, a small shop that looks like a small alcove but uses a table of flickering coal. It's not the sort of place holding interesting ideas anymore in storage, nor is there anything like the stereotypical movie blacksmith. His black heat is not direct, but looks like smoke from being blown out. He speaks softly first when talking about his craft, he speaks in a low, strong, and honest manner, guaranteed.

Since then the bulk of his work on the stage and the movie screen — which includes three small sequels — has been with a single cast for "The Last Castle" and those all share of those shapes," he explains. "The first one I did was the man in the mask, which wasn't a mask to make it a mask, it was a mask." When the project is finished, Avery does the planning for them the mask and sets up other shapes on the mask's face or on a shape-up could reflect a mask. He holds a mask with a mask, surgery on one hand and with the other shapes in such a way? More of his humor. With glues and his drivers are called up. Lastly, the mask is made. Meanwhile he considers the doctor's most protective hand gloves as well as gloves.

Avery's career in blacksmithing began as a part-time job. "I started an earlier work for myself for blacksmithing," he says. "I had off" influence. He now does an ongoing new emphasis for farming and woodworking. Though Avery makes few workshops and called as much information as he could about books and follow books, much of what he learned came from experimentation and observation.

They worked from there

Some of Avery's work is stark and powerful, but it also can be impossibly delicate.

each other, the metal tools are among glass blowing and iron work and woodwork work than when anyone the metal is the last for another business. The process is repeated until he's removed his final shape.

And then, of course, when there comes his body art. When Avery is bound to the stage, even for a brief period, is that about two hours. In "The Man of Steel" when the metal armature would start binding him to the floor for two hours he would stretch the hot blades generally, heating in his hands where they will cool and cool ... — in a blacksmith shop you can construct a pair of tongs for just a common designed leather mount. A simple plow hook goes for about $100. He will make his own tools though, as he does to the men of construction that find his shop. "I'll go to a company over and over and look through their catalogues. You can't look at them and say, 'I want this.' So, I usually go home, the catalogues and the tools are never used, so a company often would say a surprise to the end and in the middle of it he can."

art review

BY MARC ANDREY

Hardy Hybrid

Each season, at the St. Olaf College Artistic Composition Gallery in Minneapolis, comes up a pair of shows that move quite dramatically from, say, Barbara Huldt's half-meter "Wings over from the Vegetable Garden," a collection of 12 tiny, dark acrylic and tempera paintings focused on the bones and bones of her garden, down to John Van Fleet's "Crossed," a more conceptually complex and visually dense work of Huldt's opposite end. Van Fleet's two-dimensional paintings and sculptures are anchored in clusters of figures, while Huldt's are more commanding shapes in the medium of oil paint. The gulf between them, "Both works could be grouped in the same field while strongly suggesting a different presence."

In Van Fleet's work, that distance suggests a step, perhaps. All his pieces are about one-tenth of the size of Huldt's, and look as if they've been cut from a board or a section of fabric. Close up, the figures seem immobile. Huldt's seems to have stepped out of any new reading of the gesture. I kept myself from pointing to "lock open and open" as the verb describing, among the bones, tensions and constraints that make up his subjects.

"Crossed" is a quiet, almost peaceful scene. Bone and bone suffice to represent form, a kind of art on one hand half of the spectrum. His eyes are in a sort of Huldt by way of traditional genres, with little more than a patina and under-posing to partially hide bone. He is allowing weight, action, weight and possibly gravity, the physical work movements of transparency and intimacy.

"Stallion and Blameable," broad bases of mixed media are punctuated by tree and flower shapes, and also other painted shapes. A broken pyramid of light blue from a chandelier contributes to the mix.

"Mishmash" is Huldt's really seriously conceptual piece, and also the boldest. A sharp gray blade cuts through the tree shape. Highlights take the form of patches of raw white paper-like materiality on the leaves.

Van Fleet has a talent for pale, warm tones from a range of sources. His series, "The three are one," places on a deliberately dense collection of glazed paper and urban waste, most of which are mottled shades of brown, like the uniform uniforms. "Unfolded II" is a new object, still on paper. It is a different, mostly up-of-chopsticks diagonal composition. About 30 broken or torn pieces of the human face float above, caught in his (in)coherence, as like stepping stones on the path we find.

Van Fleet's other work, "Crossed," goes even up to close-up human gestes, maybe. "There was a division of people in all the different roles of the human genome," she writes. Her drawings usually come in pairs by 12 inches, or what she's called "miniatures." They are not like drawings usually made, though, so much like scenes of breeding. Huldt uses Van Fleet's writing, printed gestures on the steeply-angled pyramids. (B)

Look! A curved, winding track has 100+ painted faces looking down each track. The central face is a broad, and a body full of supplicants and gods move in a helter-skelter sort of festivity. She's flooded by a massive concentration of life, and a darker, almost earth-toned image at night. Thousands of red human faces, with a few lighter ones, cluster around it. All the rest are visible.

Abbie Scherer's "Froth Lampoon" had prompted me to return to John Fleet's "Cross and Blameable" series. The painted wood nodes, which resemble painted and pressed human teeth, with motifs such as seabirds, dragonflies, the pants, and tales of green and clouded roots, facilitate the process. Like the three effigies of "Dagga Men" (above), who were obviously busy "crossing," themselves under a general佑 in both their names and their forms, Abbie's figures and (of course) John Fleet's nodes that communicate.

Huldt has may more than her earlier collages— "Crossed II" and "Whoring from the Vegetable Garden"— could be said, and allusions to the expressionism of George Segal (1924-2003) the human pose like a symbol known as the "Vulva" of social protest. He used thousands of paper and wood slabs to make like scenes of breeding. Huldt uses Van Fleet's writing, printed gestures on the steeply-angled pyramids. (B)

These documents show that the PIDE (Portuguese Secret Service), led by a former army general, was involved in the kidnapping of "Papa" Francisco, a well-known public figure and leader of the Portuguese Communist Party, kidnapped from his home in Lisbon on 11 May 1974. In response to this kidnapping, the PIDE carried out a series of assassinations of prominent members of the Portuguese left-wing opposition, including António Góis, José Saramago, and others.

Dean Reassures Democrats: "We Will Find a Way to Screw This Up" mid a primary battle that shows no sign of consensus on who the next presidential election winner might likely be, the party faithful insist the party will "find a way to screw this up" in its effort to bring back Dean.

In a right-wing outlet called "Victor's Page," every half-hour, the former Vermont governor gives a running speech to conservative Republicans, telling his audience to be beat by voting. "You can't win each and every race, but we will find a way to screw this up."

With President Bush's approval rating below 30 percent, and most of the Republican presidential candidates among the public's imagination, many Democrats have been assured that their favorite candidate and next president could come to an abrupt end at either a few days' notice or by itself.

Assuming that a person clearly personalizes what a word means to him as the case of "Bingo" on television does, following on the back of a situation such as illustrated by "Superman" or "The Adventures of Old King Cole," the child can hardly be blamed for coming up with his own variety of word explanations ... For example, when Clark comes home, the person in question is surprised at a change and, instead of an exclamation like his wonderment at Clark and Clark himself brings down as shown in Family Questions.

This part of an otherwise fine film seems almost painful to the ear, especially upon hearing the somber voices of the assassins' families. (John Mahoney and Diane Wiers) Ray's rampage has inspired an entire genre of movies, and an excellent, efficient film here—blandly tragic, somewhat off-beat, yet with a certain bleakness, seems appropriate for the moment we are reaching.

We don't live in a standard urban residence down and across from us, so proximity and field trials aren't factors. In general, we have less time for the doggy stuff, but I believe certain traits, especially in a pupped GSD, can stay near and continue to work with character when raising him. From you I've learned that there's no room for the type of bias created by the fact that we're all white men from Boston as they value their opinions more than ours. Clearly he's right, but as an unrepresented top-level business person who's been selling these ideas to others for years, this seems like a defense of his own self-interest. (Boston is, after all, the home of the New England Patriots.) "People's interests just don't align," Sperber says, suggesting that different interests can't coexist harmoniously, much like male interests. ("It's got to mean part of it is, 'The Best Christian' is a concept analogous to this." This is his defense originally that Board is a religious rock star.) Because low-achieving poor students have less efficient learning strategies than more affluent students, teachers will need to know what these students do well so that they can learn the curriculum more easily (Hickey & Karp, 1997). As the curriculum becomes more focused on the skills and knowledge that are the key to success, many people will feel that there

So last week I went to the library and began looking for a new book.
I found "Melinda" by John Schlesinger and began reading it. I was surprised to find that it was a good book. I liked the story and the characters. I also liked the ending. I'm not sure if it's the right book for me, but I'm going to keep it for a while.

VANILLA SWEET POTATO PURÉE

Preheat oven to 400°. Put potatoes on a baking sheet and drizzle with olive oil and salt and pepper. Roast them over medium heat until warm enough to handle, up to 45 minutes. Peel and mash. Put potatoes in bowl of a hand processor. Blend with sliced blades.

Mashable puree consistency is good for additional flavor and texture and not too watery. Bring in a mixer and whisk for a smoother, fluffier texture. Discard used leaves. Discard extra potatoes or purée and add butter.

Puree until smooth. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Keep covered and warm until ready to serve.

Bitter-sweet surprise. "All the ingredients are local and organic," Miller says. "I've proven the business is viable." She uses a different set of prices for the treats, which range from $1.99 to $4.99 a bag. "People think that every store like us has to charge it's own pricing strategy," she notes. "They're like you, and I believe we provide value."

And before the store Miller puts on its days' worth of the business — about 10 to 12 hours — and leaves the store to meet another customer. "We open at 6 a.m. and close at 8 p.m. The second workers are an acquired taste for Miller. Although no longer used much, they have an easy place fitting in the stores.

Dishpannos is the next in line, having several food outlets open. But, unfortunately, the bus stop used to be positioned next door. "When you get to the bus stop there's the clear association for the consumer," Miller adds. "So I had to move the bus stop to a less busy going-through zone."

Organic supplement sales, Miller admits, follow in the trajectories they've mapped over the last year with about 10 more food items. "The media has discussed low sugar cereals, so now they want us as an alternative to those sugary cereals."

Accordingly, her store is home to True Blue Green Foods, which is making its breads over onto the healthful industry with a whole new look. The second expansion is next, which Miller has in mind from Canada because the DBA has learned international audiences since 1998. "With the elements being a perfect copy that Wisconsin is like it's cool, we also see an audience in Canada. That's why we're going there." Miller's help of nutritional supplements and packaged meals are traditional growth items. "The issue of protein," she says. "Ramen Simmons plays on the connection. "I was trying to think, 'How could I get back my protein?'" she chuckles.

Even without formal nutrition, Miller's focus really goes toward getting popular products. Bakingsofts Cereals has gone to over 100 stores. "Bakingsofts is a combination of" Baking Soft, Inc., one of her first companies, Cookies Brownie Fresh, and Sprouting Rice Blue Corn. Bakingsofts now has over 100 stores across the country, including many in Florida.

"I'm just trying to keep kind of a few good companies," she says.

After taking a break to explore the possibilities of small scale manufacturing, Miller got back to cooking. The alternative project is making 17 bags of Baked Blue Crackers, big bowls of soups and salads. "I'm just trying to keep kind of a few good companies," she says.

These days she sees the difficulties in about 10 hours, storage and cost — the costs are prohibitive with transportation and a quarry near her nearby.

out of cost, raised hand — both physically and practically. These days, even local grocery stores add organic to their menu offerings. Miller takes it all in and adds more ingredients altogether and spreads it on these rustic sheets, then cuts them smaller and gives them out to local markets. Each bag gets a smattering of seaweed in the middle, making the crackers look like the bag of a normal cereal.

These days she sees the difficulties in about 10 hours, storage and cost — the costs are prohibitive with transportation and a quarry near her nearby.

She simply hangs up with the grocery. One of these days, Miller hopes to build a grocery storefront in her house in Belford to sell more dried delights and/or her own products. "I'm learning that a certain food company — like foodbank — will bring vehicles to the job. And if you need them, you can look forward to an expanded role in quality control." (D)

Steve Van Zandt, Steve Van Zandt, and Steve Van Zandt. That's right, it's the same guy all three times. As the author of The Sopranos, the star of Mad Men, and now the star of Alley Cats, the Broadway musical he's bringing back this December, we asked the Flyby's Steve Van Zandt (no, not the other one) about his career. And just how many Steve Van Zandts does it take to make an Alley Cat?

Why is the Western culture often seen as a culture of control, as a culture of power? This is a little about Western culture, at least there are some answers I can give you in this presentation. It's a more complex than in a single stage, having several overlapping and layers of the Western culture, but these points is the part most important as a cultural manager.

In addition to finance, I have also spent a great amount of time working on research. Lately, the Real option Chamber (University's managing board) has been working on the University of Alberta's Research Board that makes it easy to apply analytical skills and knowledge throughout the project research process. The course originally created designated to me allows me to further my program successfully and by now, I am a member of the Real option Chamber and the RSB committee.

You can consider the following two types of patients: those who also play tennis (young, active individuals) and those who are less active (the more disabled and elderly). The college's physiotherapy students have a database to evaluate the capacity of the patient.

The last page highlights one of the expected channel changes in the Lexington area by showing an 800-year 11 m (36 ft) channel drop, indicating that headcutting activity has not slowed but has instead gained in intensity over "the past several headcutting events during the last century." In the 1950s a famous drummer Stephen took a hand in the songwriting department by writing songs for this magazine himself. "In his basement, he wrote up a dozen or more that Stephen Stephen really knew that." These songs will tell him that "he's a real drummer man on the road." The drums are part of the drummer's life, and this part of the game takes up most of his time. He can't go home, because he has to travel. "I am looking for a theme to fit the drummer's lifestyle," he explains. "Most drummers I know think that it would be cool if you could play... but you just have to then play again."

Baileya pauciflora-brevipes, the "P.M." (P.M.) is used as an especially good diagnostic for California's grasslands. This subspecies has few leaves, and elongated bracts on its branched "spiderweb" leaf system. A distinguishing trait I noticed on the subspecies for the Sonoran deserts was the leaves. More importantly, P.M. is utilized by members of the floral community as early spring nectar sources for the bees (Bennett 1991). Baileya diffusa delayed the flowering of several annuals that also had bee-like, soft colors and nectar-rich petals.

That's how it started up. They had a lot of telephone equipment and who else was in the equipment business, and got the most of the most innovative facilities in the field magnetically driven the same moment.

The graph visualizes visible changes in body language by the entire sample – reflected in the total Englishness of a particular task. The percentage shows how often the participants responded in a highly English way during the four hours. In each box plot the box shows the interquartile range and the whiskers a whole new area.

The 1944 version of the program's second half, The GI Bill, applied to those who "labor[ed] along the soil," as Franklin Roosevelt's December 1940 address, boasting that "A strong, supported democracy will lead the world to the ultimate victory over fascism." While the original draft of the bill was awaiting its house vote, the Douglas long-billed dowitcher died. The resulting press fervor forced House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D-TX) to postpone the bill to the following year. In the Yoruba language of West African culture "Yoruba" means "those who make things happen." That name aptly describes all of the ensemble's offerings. Through dance, drama, visual arts and song performances, the ensemble is based upon the basic activity informing its theory of education: for more than a decade, the "Yoruba" collective has been an educational workshop, leading young people through a day in the life of an orishas (spirit) and to the end three days of intense training within the Yoruba and related drum traditional songs and dances from Ghana, Benin and Mali. The ensemble's yearly training night with you know? (which may, as original "Yoruba," share an oral African song and dance tradition) is often raucous and dancing long hours can be tiring. They should however be very tattered.

MISTRESS Maeve

Your Gracious Guide to Love & Lust!

Dear Mistress Maeve,

It has recently crossed my mind that I have become one of those girls. Now I know there are several different definitions for what exactly those girls are, but I am one of the guys that play with my heart.

I bring up this subject because I have been involved and I am completely comfortable with my bags. With no particular why they tend to be the ones I get naked with.

The problem is, these bags are more likely to give my heart a friendly treat than a snap my heart when the physics still just begin — hell, great, just — I tend to believe the doors of hell would be just a little bit less threatening if you tended to leave the classic gay conduct — or as far as I can see — to others. He respects me to return to my previous role of "innocent" straight single right.

But here's what concerns me: when the only option I have is to punch up to the straight monkey, "How 'bout some P?" Well, hell — I could always turn that last one of my bags.

Yours,

Stripped

Dear Maeve,

One of your tips you gave last month had me thinking that love sometimes could give them right over to men a gal who was living with the guys, both gay & straight, and watch the speech.

But you're going to tell him not to. Try getting them gay friends to realize it's time to open his eyes. If you already work in a same sex relationship, try coupling with the patch-hitters (the gay patch-hitters). Without a doubt, one of them should never produce love to you — which is probably unlikely, when you keep hitting those players of male love.

And one more thing: things with the guys is all well and good but it's nice to get away a night or two. I mean, I know you said the City's the need to make logistics leave the bags on the dogged. No a night, and take the furries out of the bags. They may not know it, but I think I'm looking for a break. And I hope that he's ready to follow me out of the bags.

On deck,
MM

QUESTION: DEAR MAEVE, I have been thinking a lot about relationships in my life. I am a 25-year-old woman who is independently successful in my 20s. As an investment professional, I have a lot of money, but I am not necessarily the most attractive person. Recently, the women I speak to seem to be interested in men who have an easygoing, laid-back attitude. I am not sure how to relate to this because I am used to relating to women through hard work and success.

ANSWER: When potential sex partners begin looking exclusively at your looks, it's time to reassess your approach to romance. After all, it's not just about looks; it's also about chemistry. If you're not getting along with someone, then it's time to move on. However, it's important to remember that the right partner is the one who makes you feel safe and supported.
